To do that, we must build our region's transportation system on a foundation of social equity. As a region, we need to reduce congestion on our highways and roads by:

- Preventing mass displacement and restore housing affordability;

When we talk about building livable communities, we must mean “livable” for all — inclusive of all ages, abilities, races, incomes, genders, and backgrounds. We envision a region in which everyone can live, work, play, pray, and thrive. It's a region of communities where all our neighbors have the opportunity to enjoy the benefits of the region's successes, and where we're united in tackling our challenges — together.

Ensuring that transportation investments are transparent and accountable to the community;

- Making a multimodal transportation system that is safe and accessible for people of all ages, abilities, and backgrounds; and
- Guaranteeing funding for programs and operations that increases access to transportation options.
